

Chesapeake Currents

Volume 3, Issue 12

April 7, 2021

Dear Friends,

We hope you all had a wonderful Easter weekend, but didn't eat too much chocolate! In today's newsletter, we're featuring a very interesting article about child caretakers being able to work outside the home. Registration is also still available for our upcoming webinar.

As always, if you, your friends or family have any questions, we would be happy to hear from you; we sincerely appreciate your business and your referrals.

Regards,
John F. Robbert

Can a Child Caretaker Work Outside the Home?

Most states have taken the position that the care must be provided by the child in order for the transfer of the home not to be penalized. In a recent case out of New Jersey, these questions regarding the child working outside the home have been...

Planning for the Improvident Child

Some children, even as adults, are just not good with money. Good kids but lacking in financial managements skills. And sometimes children have more serious issues: drug and alcohol addiction, gambling problems, poor choice of spouse/partner/friends, prone to frivolous spending, or overly generous to charitable solicitation.

Yet hope springs eternal; parents cling to the belief that the prodigal son shall return. How then do these parents write an estate plan that both protects the assets from the improvident child but also gives the child the opportunity to earn greater control as he/she exhibits greater maturity and responsibility.

Most of estate planning ultimately comes down to an issue of control of assets and most people want each child to control their own share of an inheritance. When does one cede control to the previously improvident child? The next webinar sponsored by Chesapeake Legal Counsel addresses this topic. It explains how to create an "allowance trust" for the child and how all, or some, of the allowance trust can be distributed to the child's control as circumstances permit. Each such trust is as unique as the circumstances that beg for its use.
